As I was admiring the look of our new roof this morning I decided I should write to tell you how pleased Jeanne and I are with the work your crew did on our house. You may recall that our main concern in choosing a new roof was fire safety; our house borders a creek and several wildland fires have approached in the years we've lived here. We were concerned that the original shake roof was a significant fire hazard, and we also wanted to change the look to a Spanish style more in keeping with the design of the house. The fine work Steel Roofing Systems did installing steel Gerard tile on our 30-year-old house makes it look better than ever and gives us real confidence that we're protected in the next fire.

The SRS crew completed the project quickly and we were really pleased with the way they kept things neat, clean, and organized. The crew chief, Manuel, was very cooperative about the little things; for example, he worked very hard to make sure the new eyebrow vents were placed in unobtrusive locations and carefully aligned for a good appearance. Some time after the job was completed I noticed that the rain gutter installers had rectified flaws in the original carpentry where rafter ends weren't trimmed properly and extended below the gutters. That extra effort with a circular saw wasn't required to hang the new rain gutters and I was impressed by your crew's craftsmanship in fixing an ugly blemish that has existed since the house was built.

Jeanne and I couldn't be more pleased with the work your company did for us, and I can confidently recommend Steel Roofing Systems, Inc. to anyone who requires an attractive and fire safe roof.
